Best time to visit destin beach florida

For many people, the ideal holiday is the beach. These warm weather tourists think sunshine, white sand, cocktails in coconut shells and clear water make a perfect holiday. But what if you don't see it that way? What if you're one of those people who thinks of the beach as a place for sunburn, toe sand and skin-dry salt water? Or maybe you're not that negative. You may think that an afternoon on the beach is fine. But a weekend or a whole week? Boring. If you like your beach in smaller cans, there is hope for you. Here are eight beach destinations that are ideal for people who don't like the beach. The other attractions in these places make your holiday by the sea not only tasty, but downright pleasant.

The beaches of the city centre offer a lively and social scene (in summer). There are beach bars and burger joints, and most of Atlantic City's major hotels offer oceanfront rooms. The waves are often surfable during the high tourist season and attract some of the best surfers on the east coast. If you don't care about beaches, you can of course stroll through the historic promenade and shop, eat, sightseeing and watch people. The city's many casinos are within walking distance of the sand, as well as additional shopping. And Atlantic City returned live entertainment when Las Vegas was nothing more than a patch of Nevada desert. The only downside to this New Jersey destination is that it's not warm enough to swim all year round. Nicki Mannix/Flickr. Venice Beach is a popular place for visitors to Los Angeles and offers one of the most colorful sea scenes on the West Coast. The sand is overcrowded with sun worshippers and the water is floating, if not crystal clear. People watching is what makes Venice a total tourist attraction (as opposed to simply a beach destination). Venice is home to iconic places such as Muscle Beach and the cobbled boardwalk area – called Ocean Front Walk – which is a popular spot for roller skaters, performance artists and buskers. This promenade is not only a great place for people to watch, it also holds a variety of attractions, from tourist souvenir stalls and clothing boutiques henna tattoo artists and fortune tellers. Dennis Jarvis/Flickr. The crystal clear waters of the Croatian Riviera have made Dubrovnik one of the most popular destinations of this decade. There are a variety of beach options here. The beach of Lapad, a few miles outside the city center, has clean sand and a perfectly balanced setup: bars and shops at one end for the beach scene crowd and overcrowded, more secluded stretches of sand at the other end for those looking for some sand solitude. Pebble beaches, closer to the old town, are alternatives that are equally popular in summer. Dubrovnik is a sightseeing sights The historic old town competes with the Italian cities of the Amalfi Coast in terms of history, photoworthiness and atmosphere. An energetic summer party scene takes place all over the city and a walk throughout the old old town walls is a great way to enjoy the unique ambience of this timeless place. Michael Gwyther-Jones/Flickr. Once a sleepy coastal village near Monaco, Cannes and Nice, the city of Saint-Tropez became a hit among the jets after it was featured in the 1950s Brigitte Bardot film And God Created Woman. Beaches are the undeniable stars of the show here. Tahiti Beach is one of the most charming sandy beaches in Europe, while the more relaxed beaches of Pampelonne and Jumeaux are attractive for families and the chill-out crowd. Within walking distance of the sand you will find fine cafés, vibrant local markets and plenty of shopping. Although the boutiques here are not cheap, local and domestic wines and souvenirs will not break the bank. The atmospheric harbour area has a charming historical flair (with the exception of the multi-million dollar yachts, which are a sightseeing attraction in their own right). William Cho/Flickr. Sentosa is an island located next to the mainland of Singapore. With a nearly 2-mile stretch of man-made beach, this is where Singaporeans come when they want to hit the sand. The beaches are divided into three areas. Tanjong Beach offers a distinct lack of crowds and a sense of tranquility, while Palawan Beach is very family friendly and Siloso offers a vibrant social scene with many bars and waterfront cafés. The other attractions on the island make it a great destination for non-beach lovers. Within walking distance of the sand, Resorts World Sentosa features a huge aquarium and theme park, while Siloso Point offers a glimpse of Singapore's colonial past with a collection of historic buildings. Sentosa also has a golf course, spas and one of the best butterfly gardens in the world. All these attractions are within minutes of each other, making it an ideal destination to leave your beach-loving companions on the sand and have fun inland. Andrea Schaffer/Flickr. Da Nang is best known as a central Vietnamese port city and also has some of the best beaches in the region. It has almost 20 miles of sandy coastline, a growing collection of upscale beach resorts and a wide seafront promenade. The famous China Beach, once a popular place for American military personnel stationed in Vietnam in the 1960s, offers a range of amenities on the sand and surfable waves. Locals prefer to drive to the centrally located My Khe Beach or Non Nuoc Beach, which is the largest town centre of Da Nang. However, the list of attractions goes far beyond the coast. The city's incredibly fresh seafood, numerous shopping opportunities and historic attractions such as Marble Mountain and a museum of ancient Cham artifacts give tourists plenty to do when it's time to kick out of the sand. warrenski/Flickr. At the southernmost tip of the continent lies South Africa's Cape Town and is one of the most picturesque cities in the world. The beaches here are very attractive during the summertime of the southern hemisphere. The ubiquitous Table Mountain offers breathtaking views that allow even the most unenthusiastic beach-goers to enjoy the afternoon on the sand. Camps Bay and St. James Beach are the most popular places, although Boulders Beach, with its unique rock formations and sympathetic penguin population, is a delight for all visitors. There is also a lot to do off the beach. The attractive Two Oceans Aquarium, historic Robben Island (the prison where Nelson Mandela sat) and the colourful Bo-Kaap district are great sightseeing opportunities to spend time off the beach, and there are plenty of shopping, restaurants and wine bars in the heart of the city. Glenn Harper/Flickr. Sydney's Bondi Beach is arguably Australia's most famous sandy beach. His well-known life-saving group, the world's oldest rescue corps, watches over the crowded waters, where sunbathers, swimmers and surfers create one of the world's liveliest beach scenes. But also away from sun tanning, water sports and swimming becomes much actionless. Campbell Parade, Sydney's main seaside boulevard, offers restaurants, bars, shopping and some of the best people in Australia. The Marine Discovery Center and popular outdoor markets are extras you can put on your itinerary. There is also a promenade that sits along the picturesque cliffs that sit outside the beach area.
